The mines on the famous Comstock lode had got down so deep that there was fear their productiveness would be stopped by the heat and water. Sutro saw in this condition of affairs an opportunity for a great project, and with characteristic energy went to work on it. His idea was a tunnel to be run nearly five miles to tap the Comstock on the lower levels, drain the mines, perfect the ventilation, and make the extraction of the ores vastly easier. Having perfected his plans, Sutro succeeded in getting a charter from the Nevada legislature. Then he got a contruct from the mine owners by which he groundless. was to receive $2 s ton on all oves taken from the mines after his tunnel had reached the lode.
